It's their tablet; they can write what they want

However in applying an editorial policy that selectively allows some content while suppressing 'undesireable' content they become a publisher just like any newspaper or magazine and CDA § 230 does not apply.

'undesireable' content is any content that disagrees with 'company policy'. it is the 'company policy' that makes the tablet a publisher: 'company policy' is not the same as statute.

advocating, discussing, or planning anything that is illegal by statute is not allowed on any tablet but this is by statute and not by any editorial policy.
